The Seventh Conference for Research in Diaconia and Christian Social Practice (ReDi)

INVITATION

Beyond Services towards Justice

Questions on the issue of justice are posed by challenging developments in many parts of the world. Inequality and injustice are growing. In the Global South exploitation of resources, the truth about climate change and globalization continue to impact social, economic and democratic developments. In the Global North we continue to see increasing consumption, individualism and wealth inequalities. As a result, responses to phenomena such as global migration are often based on self-preservation and the protection of identity and belonging.

Globally, the 2008 financial and economic crisis has led to increased precarity in societies which has resulted in growing mistrust of democratic institutions and leadership. Yet despite the increasing disparities, we have never been more able to develop global connections than we are today. Technology allows us to understand 'the other' faster than ever before and we can become more aware of the impact of our actions and decision in all parts of the world.

Globally, we still see ethnic and gender injustice as well as economic, educational, environmental and social injustice. There is an increasing body of research that proves such injustice such as the link between ethnicity, discrimination and underrepresentation in the labour market, as well as the impact of material deprivation on both health outcomes and civic participation.

The practice of Diaconia and Christian social service seeks to combat these global challenges. However, in many countries such practice and the organisations who provide services are bound to state programs, refinanced by state schemes and thus somewhat limited in scope and outreach. How can we strive to get beyond services towards justice? What contribution can theology make to the development of social justice and Diaconia from both national and global perspectives? Where can the intersection of research and praxis shed light on the future perspectives of Diaconia in addressing social injustice?

Keynote speakers will highlight the most pressing questions, working groups and paper sessions will give ample opportunity to discuss and look for answers together with a shared purpose.

The main themes of the conference are:

- Globalisation and Justice from a Theological Perspective
- The Economics of Solidarity
- Welfare, Gender and the Crisis of Care
- Diaconal Science in Current Academic Curricula
